In Europe, men don't usually wear skirts. But in Scotland, men traditionally wear a kind of skirt. It is called a kilt. They are proud of their country and its history, and they feel that the kilt is part of that history.

Before 1730, Scottish men wore a long shirt and a blanket around their shoulders. These clothes got in the way when the men started to work in factories. So, in 1730 a factory owner changed the blanket into a skirt. That's how the first kilt was made.

These kilts had colorful lines going up and down and side to side. Originally, the colors had no special meaning. But later the colors became important to Scottish families. By about 1850, most families had special colors for their kilts. For example, men from the Campbell family had kilts with green, yellow and blue lines. For Scottish people nowadays, the colors of the kilts are part of their family history.

Jamie : Well, yesterday morning, when I was using my manager's computer, it suddenly froze and wouldn't work at all. It took me a long time to fix it.

Beth : So, did the manager help you to fix it?

Jamie : No way. First of all, I didn't ask him if I could use it.

Beth : How terrible! Why did you do that?

Jamie : I just wanted to check something on the Internet. He was out of the room and his computer was on, so it was easier for me to use it.

Beth : You should not use other people's computers without asking.
