Do you think you're smarter than a ^{*1}chimpanzee? Japanese scientists gave short-term memory tests to some young chimpanzees and to some adult ^{*2}humans. The scientists found that some chimpanzees had a better memory. This is surprising. Many people thought that human ^{*3}brains were better than chimpanzee brains in every way.

The tests were given to twelve university students and three five-year-old chimpanzees who had been taught the order of the numbers from one to nine. They saw nine numbers on a computer screen. When they touched a number, the other eight numbers turned into white squares. The test was to remember what the other numbers were and then to press the squares in the right order. Ayumu, a chimpanzee, was the best at this test. Then they did a second test. In this test, five numbers appeared on the screen for less than a second. Then they were ^{*4}replaced by white squares. Again, the test was to press the squares in the right order. Ayumu was best at this test, too.

If some chimpanzees are ^{*5}superior to humans in this way, what makes humans different from animals? There are scientists who are trying to give answers to this question, but for now they are not sure.
